7. Summary Description:

Mountain View Farm, an 18th-century mansion and a 19th-century cottage and five other supporting buildings, is located in the vicinity of Clifford in Amherst County, Virginia. It is situated to the west of U. S. Highway 29 and north of State Route 610. The House and supporting buildings sit on a level piece of land surrounded by a pasture to the northeast and a winery to the southwest.

The main house is a standard I-house with a rear ell addition oriented from east to west. It is a timber frame building sheathed in weatherboard with chimneys on its north and south elevations. The main entry is in the center of the front facade which is the west elevation.

The cottage was built by Dr. Paul Carrington Cabell, pioneer in the field of public health in Central Virginia and a cousin of Joseph C. Cabell, the third rector of the University of Virginia. It is a one-room building with a lean-to shed on the north side. The cellar has an earthen floor and stone rubble walls. The other outbuildings include a well house, a playhouse (originally a chicken coop), a smokehouse, an ice house/carriage house and a chicken coop. All of these are timber frame buildings except the ice house/carriage house which is log constructed. All of the supporting buildings are whitewashed.

Architectural Analysis:

Mountain View Farm is an excellent example of an early 19th-century farmstead, having retained numerous dependencies in good condition, largely unaltered. The main house is an I-house with a rear ell addition built when the house was moved from Geddes Mountain to its present site in 1831. It is a timber-frame building sheathed in weatherboard.

The front symmetrical facade, the west elevation, has three bays with a centrally located entry below a two-light transom. Above the entry is a double-hung window. The flanking bays have double-hung windows on both the first and second floor. The windows on the first floor have a nine-over-nine light configuration, and the second-floor windows have a six-over-nine light configuration. The front facade windows have louvered shutters. The windows on the rear facade have nine-over-six light configuration. The two brick chimneys on the north and south elevations serve the main rooms of the first and second floors. The exterior trim consists of simple beaded corner boards and a box cornice. The front porch with its turned posts and brackets was a later addition, built during the last half of the nineteenth century. The roof has a shallow pitch and is covered with painted standing seam terne metal.

The rear ell, a one-story gable with a chimney on the east facade, is also built out of time frame and sheathed in weatherboard. There is a continuous screened-in shed porch on the north and east. The entire building rests on a brick foundation.

The house features a central hall plan with flanking rooms on both floors. The only stairway is at the end of the central hall. It has a double run, open-string staircase with simple brackets. The newel posts and all of the interior doors are mortised and tenoned with dowels. Two of the interior doors still have their original 18th-century hardware. The original flooring of the entire main house is heart pine. The plaster walls are trimmed with simple moldings including flat chair rails and baseboards. The south first floor room and the addition have more elaborate Green Revival mantels and trim. The fireplace in the north room has an elaborate molding consisting of a frieze with reeded end tryglyphs and plain metopes. The center reeded tryglyph is oversized. The cornice serves as the mantel shelf.

The 16' X 24' one room cottage, (Doctor's Office), probably dating to the 1830s or 40s, has a lean-to porch on the north side. Timber-framed, the cottage is sheathed in rough, random weatherboard of various lengths. It has simple trim and a V-crimped painted metal roof. It rests on a rubble stone foundation with a dirt floor cellar. The interior walls have double beaded wainscoting and the mantel features a flat board surround with a crown molding supporting the shelf. The chimney and flue is a wooden structure with a brick chimney cap, that has been removed. The front entry of the cottage has a replacement door located in the center of the south elevation. On the west elevation, there is a small double-hung window with six-over-six lights and a single board hood. The east elevation has no windows or doors. The north elevation consists of the porch, one double-hung window with six-over-six lights, a cased door opening and another opening which leads into the stairway that descends to the cellar.

Adjacent to the cottage is the well house. It is a simple post structure with a gabled roof and lattice on all four walls with a central door located on the west elevation. It has a poured-in-place concrete slab floor that was installed at a much later period. Next to the well house is the playhouse, a one-room building originally built to be a chicken coop. The gabled timber playhouse rests on stone piers and is sheathed in weatherboard. On the south side of the building there is a simple door and a double casement window. It also has a V-crimped painted metal roof. North of the playhouse stands the ice/carriage house, a split log, gabled building. It has a double door central entry with board-and-batten doors and an attic access. A rectangular chicken coop sits west of the ice/carriage house. It is a simple shed building with whitewashed weatherboard and a flat V-crimped metal roof. A smokehouse stands between the chicken coop and the main house. A one-room, gabled, timber-framed building with whitewashed weatherboard, it has one entry center on the south elevation. It has a dirt floor and rests on stone piers.

8. Statement of Significance

Mountain View Farm is significant under Criteria C as one of a handful of surviving antebellum farmsteads in Amherst County that, along with its main residence, retains a remarkable ensemble of well preserved and largely unaltered outbuildings, including a rare extant 19th century doctor's office. All seven buildings contribute to the nominated area including the 18th-century residence which was moved to the present site in 1831, the doctor's office, 2 chicken coops, a smoke house, a well house and a combination ice house/carriage house. The dwelling house, built by Colonel Hugh Rose in the last quarter of the 18th century, was moved to the present site by a subsequent owner, William F. Spencer so that the house would be closer to the newly constructed stagecoach road that linked Philadelphia with the Carolinas. The farmstead is closely associated with a prominent Piedmont family-- the Cabells-- who were active in the political life of both Amherst and nearby Nelson counties. Dr. Paul Carrington Cabell, a local physician was responsible for erecting the collection of outbuildings after he acquired the property in 1833 to support the main residence and the agricultural activities of the plantation. The property was owned briefly by Samuel Miller of Lynchburg, a well known philanthropist, who had planned to raise medicinal herbs on the property; Miller died in 1959 before achieving this goal.

Historical Background

Mountain View Farm was built by Colonel Hugh Rose on 1872 acres he owned in Amherst County. He later gave it to his daughter, Nancy, who married Samuel Irvine. Irvine sold the house and 240 acres to William Spencer in 1798.¹ The house and the land around was then known as "Spencer's Mountain."² In 1812, William Spencer's estate was divided among his heirs. Norville Spencer inherited the parcel on which the dwelling house stood. In 1831, Norville Spencer's estate was also divided into lots. Lot number 2, known as the Mansion House Lot, was allotted to William F. Spencer.³ By 1830 a stagecoach road connecting Philadelphia and the Carolinas was built and passed near Spencer's Mountain. William F. Spencer moved the house from Spencer's Mountain to its current site in order to be closer to the stagecoach road, perhaps to attract business.⁴

Spencer, however, was unable to make a successful business out of his farm and forced to sell both the acreage and the house to William H. Garland and Charles Perrow to cover his debts, which concluded the period of the Spencer's ownership.⁵

In 1834, Perrow, a trustee for Spencer, sold 200 acres and the dwelling house to Doctor Paul Carrington Cabell for $500.⁶ Cabell incorporated this land into the vast acreage he already held which lay southwest of the newly acquired Mountain View Farm. Dr. Cabell made the house his new residence. Cabell was a descendant of Dr. William Cabell (1700-1774), an early resident of Nelson County and the progenitor of the Cabell family in this country. The Cabell family has produced a number of prominent physicians in Virginia, including James Lawrence Cabell (1813-1889), founder of the National Board of Health and a pioneer in the use of cadavers to practice medical techniques.⁷

Dr. Paul Carrington Cabell was one of the first physicians to practice in Amherst County. He was born April 10, 1799, and was raised and educated at "Union Hill," a well known Cabell homestead in Nelson County. He studied medicine under the tutelage of Doctor George Callaway in Lynchburg, and in 1823 he married Mary B. Irvine of Bedford County.⁸

It was Paul Cabell who built the supporting outbuildings around the house and renamed the estate "Mountain View." The most significant supporting building is the office where he saw his patients and administered to the sick. It was said of his services as a doctor that "he was discriminating prudent, prompt, and charitable, often giving his professional services to the poor without charge."⁹

In 1836 Dr. Cabell died and was buried at Mountain View. His son, Doctor William Irvine Cabell, inherited the Mountain View property and his father's medical practice. For the next 19 years, William Irvine Cabell operated the farm at Mountain View and practiced medicine. At his death, the property passed to Elizabeth Henrian Davies, a descendant of William Irvine Cabell.¹⁰ The next owner was Samuel Miller who acquired the property sometime after 1858. Miller, a millionaire philanthropist and creator of Miller Park in Lynchburg, the Female Orphan Asylum of Lynchburg and the Miller School in Albemarle County,¹¹ bought Mountain View to develop a profitable farm that would specialize in the cultivation of the medicinal herb, "horehound."¹² Miller was unable to see this business venture come to fruition. He died in 1859, leaving all of his property, including Mountain View, to charity.

It was not until 1877 that the property again served as home to a private family. It was bought in 1877 by George Jones for his son and bride, George Ellis and Ella Thompson Jones.¹³ Mountain View was later the subject of a legal dispute involving Samuel Miller's estate in 1895 when Nicholas M. Page sued the Board of the Virginia Literary Fund, a Miller charity in Richmond. The verdict of Judge James Bumgardner, Jr. awarded Mountain View outright to Mrs. Ella Jones and Joseph K. Thompson.¹⁴ Mrs. Ella Hanson, a descendant of the Jones family, inherited the parcel with the Mountain View house and its dependencies. She is the current owner.
